

A free and independent media is a requirement for an open and functional democratic republic. The consolidation of media outlets into the hands of a few corporate entities would severely restrict the access of the public to a free media. The notion that corporations have second amendment rights is a legal fiction. The bill of rights is aimed toward the freedom of individuals.